SIR.

Am very much surprized at the Endeavours which you tell me some People use, to give the Country an ill Opinion of those who voted against the French Treaty of Commerce. I cannot but think it very strange Usage to honest Gentlemen, who have done such great Things for her Majesty and the Nation, that they should not only be represented as Persons very Ignorant of what they ought chiefly to understand; but also be sent down into their Countrys, against the new Elections, with the odious Mark of Whigs and Whimficals.

The Parliament, 'tis true, out of their Affection, Zeal and Duty, to her Majesty, has given whatever the has defir'd: Millions after Millions; and not with a Defign to carry on a War, but to procure a Peace; the Advantage of which was to have been the Enlargement and Increase of our Commerce; but now that the Peace is made, and the Treaty of Commerce laid before them, they have not understood, we are told, the advantageous Conditions that have been obtain'd, but have prevented the Nation from reaping those Benefits it fo much wants. If after this Manner, and in this Light, the Memory of this Parliament is to be continued to Posterity, I believe few will envy them the Glory their Names will meet with in future Ages: But I hope a short space of Time will convince all Mankind, that the Parliament was not deluded in this Matter, and that they have not deferved the Treatment they have met with.

Besides, I must desire you to reslect, in what a tender and respectful manner the Parliament proceeded on this Occasion: Formerly, when a certain Treaty appear'd to them to carry with it but a bare possibility of Prejudice to no very confiderable part of our Trade, they voted the Person that made it, and all those that were any ways concern'd in it, Enemys to their Country; but how differently have they chosen to act in this Affair? They only refus'd to repeal a great many Laus in order to render this Treaty Effectual; they pais'd no Cenfures on the Persons that negotiated and concluded it; but, on the contrary, in a very few days after, left the flight Wounds which they had given should fester, they were content to lick them themselves. They represent the Edifice which had been raising so long, and with so much Artifice, as a good Foundation, tho not a perfect Building; and humbly defire, that all that which was imperfed might be orsended, and all that which was unintelligible might be explain'd. This, one would have thought, might have recover'd them from their fall'n State, and refor'd them to Favour. However, as the Love of one's Country is the greatest and most noble Vertue, so its Service is its own Reward; and with this Satisfaction these injur'd Gentlemen may wait patiently till they have that Justice done them which no impartial Person, who is fully inform'd of the thing it self, can refuse them.

You, Sir, I am certain, cannot but agree with me in this Opinion, because 'tis impossible but that a Man of your Understanding in Trade, must be convinc'd, how Faral the ratifying in Parliament the 8th and 9th Articles must have been to this Nation; you cannot but have been convinc'd of this, by the Representation of the Merchants to the Lord Commissioners of Trade and Plantations, in the Year 1674. by which it appears, that the Nation at that time loft upwards of a Million a Year by the Trade with France, and that that Scheme was incontestably proved to be a true one in the House of Commons, I have formerly erly acacquainted you. But I might also refer you to all the Petitions in the Votes, and to the Speeches of Mr. Cook, Mr. Milner, Mr. Toriano, Mr. Aislabie, Sir Tho Hanmer, Sir Arthur Kay, Mr. Smith of Glasgow, and feveral others, which I fent you down whilft this matter was in Agitation. But supposing you had not feen those Excellent Discourses, is it not enough to fatisfy the World, that they know the Sense of the Parliament in this matter? If they have been deluded in one thing, they may have been deluded in others, and that may go farther than they who make the Objection, perhaps, would have it; 'twould be very strange if this should be the only Error they have committed these three Years, especially when we confider how much pains they took to inform themselves fully. Never was any Matter manag'd with more Deliberation and Candour; the numerous Petitions which were fent up from all Parts of the Nation against this Treaty, were all read and examin'd, the Merchants and Tradefmen were heard in both Houses; and the great Numbers appear'd against the Bill, no one appear'd for it. Now, when a Matter has been fo folemnly debated before both Houses of Parliament, and, according to all appearance, would have been condemn'd by a confiderable Majority in the House of Lords, and actually has been condemn'd by the House of Commons; is not this enough to latisfy all the reasonable part of Mankind, that they thought what was offer'd, pernicious to the Publick? What can be more convincing? And is it not wonderful, that against all this substantial Evidence, any body would be so weak, as to put into the Ballance the false and trifling Arguments of The Mercator; a Paper which is now certainly known to be written by Daniel Foe, a Fellow who has prostituted his Pen in the vilest manner to all Partys, and to all Persons; who has formerly suffer'd the most ignominious Punishment, and is at present under Prosecution, by her Majesty's order, for Three infamous and treasonable Libels, as gainst our Queen, against the Protestant Succession, and against the Ministry; so that this Author, notwithstanding his fair Pietences, is a Snake in the Grass.

As for those Gentlemen who gave their Votes for the Bill, I herewith fend you an exact List of them; by which you will find, that near two Thirds of the 185 have Places, or an immediate Dependance upon the Court; and amongst the rest of them, a great many have no Concern in Trade, nor any Estares in Land, and are not qualify'd to ferve in Parliament again: On the other fide, amongst those who Voted against the Bill, there are, to their Honour be it spoken, some Worthy Patriots, who Voted for their Country, against thtir Places; Eight and twenty Knights of Shires, and those some of the most considerable in Great Britain; almost all the Representatives of the great Trading Citys, such as London, Bristal, Exeter, &c. and the Remainder of the 194. are chiefly Gentlemen of great Estates in Land, or very rich Merchants. Befides it appears that the Majority of those that were absent, was on the fide of the Whigs.

But I will not infift any longer upon the Reception the 8th and 9th Articles have met with in England; I will inform you what Opinion they have of them in France, and this is another way to discover to which Kingdom they are Beneficial. The Mercator boldly affirms, that the People in France look upon them as prejudicial to them, and that they are very glad they were rejected by the Parliament. But the Paris Gazette, which gives an exact Account how the Bill was thrown out, does not take notice of that Transaction as a Subject of Joy to France, but infinuates, that the Bill was to be brought in again next Set-

But I have a better Evidence in my Hands than any Gazette whatever, which will put this Matter out of Dispute; and that is an Authentick Paper which was was deliver'd at the Door of the House of Commons, the Day of that Memorable Debate; an Abstract of which follows.

" The Ship Success of Hastings, Ben. Meadow Ma-" ster: The John and Elizabeth of London, William " Akid Master: The -" John Fellows Master: The Mary and Elizabeth, " P. Fastram Master. These four Ships took in " their Loading in London, bound for Rhoan in " France: Their Cargo confisted of Lead, Red Lead, White Lead, Logwood, Fustick, and other Wood " for Dyer's Use; and Pepper, Shellack, Glew, " Horns, and Kid's Hair. After their Arrival at " Rhoan, having made a true Report of their Ships " and Cargo, they were feiz'd the 4th of April last, " the Hatches feal'd up by the Admiralty and Custom-" house, and the Masters were summon'd to appear " before the Judge of the Admiralty, to fee their " Ships condemn'd for the King's Use, and to pay " 3000 Livres Fine, each of them, pursuant to a " Law, as they fay, bearing Date the 6th of Sept. " 1701, which prohibits almost all English Goods, " except Corn, Eatables, &c. But a French Ship " called La Marie Therese, Francis Mailard Master, " came also from London at the same time with us, " loaden with the very fame forts of Goods, and was " deliver'd; as also several Hamburghers did deliver " there the very fame Species of Goods, without " any Difficulty. Three of us Masters went up to " Paris, and apply'd to Mr. Prior, who spoke about " it to the Ministers of State there, but in vain. " All we could learn there from the Merchants in " Rhoan, why we should be used so severely, and " other Nations permitted to bring in those same

"Goods, was, That they believ'd if the Parliament of England had settled the Trade with France, we should be more favourably us'd, and till then, nothing

" thing must be brought from England, except Corn,

" Oxen, and fuch like.

This is another fort of Evidence, than the Mercator's bare Word; here is a Master of a Ship in Person come directly from France, to lay his own, and his Fellow-sufferers Case before the Parliament, and ready to certify upon Oath, if requir'd, That the French us'd the English worse than any other Nation, because the Parliament had not pass'd a Bill for confirming the Treaty of Commerce; and that the English might expect to be better us'd, if they would pass such a Bill, but not till then. Here you fee, that 'twas in vain that Her Majesty's Minister apply'd for Redress to the French Court: The Mafter faid that Mr. Prior could not fo much as procure the Liberty for the Ships to return home again. What has been done fince, in order to get them discharg'd; whether the Merchants have prov'd the Goods to belong to French Men, or whether they are yet discharg'd, or not, I cannot tell. How vastly different is this Information from the Mercator's Trash? Does it not sufficiently prove, That the French know very well that this Treaty is advantageous to them, fince they use their best Friends so ill, in order to get the 8th and 9th Articles confirm'd by our Parliament?

But suppose now, for Argument-sake, we should allow what ought not to be allow'd, and what can never be prov'd, viz. That England may get by such a Trade with France; that will not prove that it ought to be open'd upon these Terms, unless it be first made appear, that we shall not suffer more by the Loss of our Trade in other Places. Some say we got 2 or 300000 s. a Year, during the last Peace, by the Trade with France; but 'tis very well known, we have got above a Million a Year by that with Portugal during the War, and 'tis as certain that these two Trades, according to the present Treaty of Commerce with France, are inconsistent: They are set opposite to one another, as appears by a Treaty made fome Years fince with Portugal, entirely upon account of our Woollen Manufactures, for which I must own, I cannot help praising the Persons that made it, however I may differ from them in other Matters; for 'tis the Portugal Trade which has supported us in the War, and without it, we fhould foon find the Peace more burthensome than the War. But I need not talk to a West-Country-Man, who for several Years, has seen fo much Portugal Gold in the Fairs, Markets, Shops, and amongst the Gentlemen's Stewards, how advantageous the Portugal Trade is to England: You will be glad to hear it is every Day encreasing, which the Mercator himself owns, and tells us it is owing to the Portuguese having lately discover'd prodigious Gold Mines. And is it not worth our While to Trade with fuch a Nation? Those Gold Mines have not been discover'd for them, but for us, if we are not so mad, as at all Adventures, to break so beneficial a Treaty. By this Treaty, the King of Portugal confents that we shall have his Gold for our Woollen Manufactures; but by the present Treaty of Commerce with France, the French are to have our Money for their Wines, Silks, Brandys, &c. The Trade with Portugal will Maintain, nay, Enrich our Poor; that with France, as stated in the Eighth and Ninth Articles, will Beggar and Undoe our Gentry. But here I will let you have a Translation of the Portugal Treaty, because, perhaps, you may never have seen it; and because, for a good while together, it was deny'd there was any fuch Treaty.

Translation of the Treaty, fign'd at Lisbon the 27th of December, 1703.

Article 1st.

H Is Sacred Royal Majesty of Portugal promises for himself and his Successors, That Liberty shall be given to bring into Portugal for-ever hereaster B Woollen

Woollen Cloths, and all forts of Woollen Manufactures of Great-Britain, in the same manner as used to be done before they were prohibited by the Laws, upon this Condition nevertheless, Article 2d.

To wit, That Her Sacred Royal Majesty of Great-Britain and Her Successors, shall be obliged in all times to come, to admit the Wines of the Growth of Portugal into Great-Britain, in such manner, as that at no time hereafter (whether there be Peace or War between Great-Britain and France) any thing more be demanded for those Wines by the name of Custom or Duty, or by any other Title, directly or indirectly, than two Thirds of the Custom or Duty which is demanded for the same Quantity, or Measure of French Wine, whether those Wines are brought into Great-Britain in Hogsheads or Casks, or in any other Veffels; but if this Abatement of Customs which is to be made, as is aforefaid, shall be prejudic'd in any manner, or abolish'd, It shall be Just and Lawful for his Sacred Royal Majesty of Portugal 10 prohibit again the Woollen Cloths, and the rest of the Woollen Manufactures of Great-Britain.

Thus it appears plainly by this Treaty, That if the Duty upon French Wines had, pursuant to our Treaty of Commerce with France, been made equal with that upon the Portugal Wines, this great Branch of our Woollen Trade had been cut off; for not the Woollen Cloths only, as the Mercator falfely asserts, would have been prohibited, but also all the other Woollen Manusactures of Great-Britain, which is one of the Reasons why our good Friends the French so much dessir'd to see their new Treaty take place. They are not ignorant of the vast Advantages we make by the Trade with Portugal, in the Disposal of our Woollen Manusactures: They have Woollen Manusactures for them, and and want to be making a Treaty with them, as foon as we have broken ours; for at present all sorts of French Woollen Goods are probibited in Portugal. Monfieur Menager offer'd the Portugal Ministers at Utrecht, above 7 Weeks fince, a Plan of a Treaty of Commerce which is very advantageous to Portu-. The French will give them Leave to bring their Tobaccos iuto France, by reducing the Dutys immediately (NOT HERE-AFTER) and their Sugars of all forts, without fuch Restrictions as the English are obliged to, provided they will come into the Treaty last mention'd: They use all manner of Arguments induce to the Portuguese to it. One of the Fr-b Ministers, at the very same time that their Friends here were pressing the Parliament to break in upon the Portugal Treaty, told the Portugal Plenipotentiarys, that the ill Treatment of the En-Sh, in having no Regard to that Treaty, and also upon other Occasions, might justly provoke Portugal to flight fuch ungrateful People, and joyn with France in the Treaty propos'd. In thort, 'tis plain, that the Trade with Portugal is the only Trade that can be of the greatest importance to England, especially now that Spain is in the Hands of the House of Bourbon. For this Reafon, I was extremely glad, when I heard that the King of Portugal was one of the first that came into Her Majesty's Measures, in relation to the Peace. This gave me good Ground to hope, that fome Advantages might be gain'd for him, as a Reward for that young Prince's religning himfelt entirely to Her Majesty's Care: Besides, I consider'd of how much Confequence every thing that related to him, must be to us in point of Trade, which when the Peace took place, was all we had to concern ourselves about,

I am forry, that that King's reasonable Demands have not been yet comply'd with by Spain; but when the Spanish Ambassador arrived at Utrecht, the Portugal Ministers told him, that their Master would be now contented that all the Places which bad been taken on either fide, during the War, might be reftor'd, and that they were ready to give up the Towns which they had taken upon the Frontiers of Spain, provided they might have their Settlement upon the River Plata in the West Indies, of which the Spaniards had disposses'd them in this War; that that Settlement was of the utmost Importance to Portugal, because it gave occasion to a Communication between the Brazils and the Country of Peru; and that this was fir short of what a certain P——e promis'd to procure for them, when the Plan of Peace was first propos'd: In answer to which, Monsieur Monteleone rold hem. That he wonder'd they should be so much impos'd upon; for he could affure them, that that P- engag'd to M. Menager, not to intermeddle in the Affairs of Portugal; and that 'twas upon that Confideration, that the King of Spain had yielded up two or three Places. Monfieur Monteleone must needs be militaken in this Matter; but yet 'tis certain that the Spaniards act as if they depended upon it, for at the Place of Treaty, they make every Day more and more unreasonable Demands; and on the Frontiers of Portugal, they have got together a confiderable Army, and are ready to fer down before Campo Major, as the Portuguese apprehend; but we are very well affored that the King of Spain has made the most solemn Promises not to attempt any thing against Portugal, and therefore Endeavours are used to perswade them to be easy, and no doubt they will he taken care of; for should that Country and its Dominions fall into the Hands of the House of Bourbon, that Family will then be in Possession of all the Gold in the World, a Metal which Her Majesty, who bolds the Ballance, would foon perceive the Weight of.

all along been of the new Administration, how much I have applauded their Zeal for our Church, add the Service they have done their Country, in putting a stop to that Flame of War which must at last have confum'd us. I beartily defire that the Peace may be lasting, but I can never pretend to say, that all the Advantages have been agreed to for our Trade, that might have been with'd, except there are others not However, that is the Bulinels of a vet publick. House of Commons, and I hope we shall get such a one as understands Trade, otherwise I sear we shall be very great Sufferers. In the mean time, it were to be wish'd, that her Majesty, who, I am certain, has very much Goodness and Compassion for her People, had heard half of what was faid against the French Treaty of Commerce in the House where the spoke last.

As for those who are not content to give the Ministers their due Praises for having overcome all the Obstacles to this Peace, which had been so industriously and artificially contrived to prevent it; as also for recovering the Nations Credit, and almost entirely suppressing Faction; but who must, besides all this, be declaring, what great Advantages we have gain'd in Trade; I defire them to take this short and general View, how our Trade stands at present.

The Fishery of Newfoundland, and all the Islands thereabouts, tho fecur'd by an Act of Parliament to the Natives of Great-Britain, * exclufive of all others, is given, in great * See 10 & measure, by the Treaty of Peace to 11. Guil. 3. France and Spain, and all the faid Ifcap. 25. lands are entirely given to France; fo that those two Countrys being our chief Markets for Fish, and they being now to be supply'd by their own Ships and their own People with that Commodity, our Fishery is almost become useless to us; for if the French and Spaniards have no occasion for our Fish, what fignifys it upon how good Terms we can carry them thither, supposing we had, in that respect, all we can ask? If they had been under a Necessity, as formerly, to have taken our Fish, because they could have none any were else, they must have done all they could to have encourag'd us to have brought it to them.

As for our Trade with Spain, we are yet in the Dark about it; for the it was understood that her Majesty would have laid the Spanish Treaty before the Parliament, and altho it was brought over ten Days before the Prorogation, yet it was not made publick.

Our Trade to the South Sea is a meer Embrio, and the Affair of the Affiento, as appears by the additional Article of the Contract, has hitherto been carry'd on with great Loss to the Persons concern'd in it.

The Trade with France is fuch, as even this Parliament cannot come into; the 'tis certain they are as much devoted to the Service of those that made it, as ever any Parliament was.

Our Trade to Turkey and the Streights, must every day decrease, by reason that the French now send great Quantitys of Goods thither.

As for our Flanders Trade, of which so much has been talk'd, we know not what to think on't, while 'tis carry'd on by an Army of 14 or 15000 Men, an Expence which 2 s. in the Pound will not afford, and consequently these Trades, under such Circumstances, cannot be of any Advantage to the Nation.

But that which must not be omitted, is the Wound which almost all our Trade in general must have receiv'd by the 8th and 9th Articles being ratify'd; for the it did not succeed, yet the apprehension of it has put all Business to a stand; neither is it likely to revive now the Wound is kept open, by the Resolution that is taken to attempt it again. This is the true and only reason of that Deadness of Trade which is fo fenfibly felt by all fort of People at prefent, and it must continue till the apprehention of what is known to be so fatal to it, be remov'd; for what part of the World can a Merchant set himself to Trade to, whilst things are in this Fluctuation and Uncertainty? Must not our Cloths and Stuffs be a Drug, when no prudent Person will venture to provide a great Quantity for the Portugal Exportation, for fear that King should be compell'd to break a Treaty which we have dealt with in fuch a manner?

But suppoling this should not happen, how can our Merchants engage for the Portugal Wines, which must be taken, in part, for the Returns of our Woollen Goods, when they can have no Affurance that the French Duty shall not be lower'd before they can have dispos'd of those Wines here? And this is the State of our Trade with Italy, and feveral other Foreign Markets, and consequently Trade must needs be in a miferable Condition, especially amongst those that deal in the Woollen Manufactures.

For the same Reasons, our Home Business cannot but be in a very languishing State; for how can the Shopkeepers employ the Silk-Weavers of London, Norwich, Canterbury, &c. or the Linnen-Weavers of Lancashire, Yorkshire, Somersetshire, &c. in order to have a good Stock by them against the next Winter. when no body knows but that a Deluge of French Silks and Linnens may be pour'd in upon them, and all their Stocks be left upon their hands, to their utter Ruin? Rather than run fuch great Hazards, Merchants and Tradefinen chuse to put their Mony into Stocks and the publick Funds, which must needs be a great Hindrance to Trade, and an irreparable Loss to the poor Manufacturers, who have nothing to maintain their Familys, but their daily Labour.

For my own part, I must trankly own Lam full of Apprehensions of the ill Confequence of what has already pass'd in relation to the 8th and 9th Articles; and when I confider, that perhaps the fame in all Points may be ratify'd in Parliament (for I am fensible very great Efforts will be made towards it) Idon't know what can afford us a more dismal Prospect to our Trade: The pernicious Consequences will be immediately felt by the Nation, the French will in a little time draw all our ready Money from us, and many Thousands of our Poor will be reduc'd to a starving Condition: The People will never be at quiet till that Law be again repeal'd; and what a fatal Strife will this be to England? This will be like a War in our very Vitals, and infinitely more destructive than any War we have yet been engag'd in.

But, as yet, it is in our own Powers to prevent it, and this it most nearly concerns us all to do, by making choice of such Members as are copable of so important a Business as our Trade, and honest enough not to be byass'd by any Means what soever.

If ever there was a Necessity for us to exert our utmost Abilitys, it is on this Occasion. We are now, at length, got out of a long and grievous War; we have happily secur'd our Church beyond all manner of Danger; and we have nothing now to do, but to take care of our Trade, which if we do not, we shall in a little while, be the most Beggarly, and the most Miserable Nation upon Earth, and the Jest of all Mankind.

I do, and always shall, own my self to be a most passionate Admirer of our Gracious Queen, the best of Princes, and all Her Glorious Actions; and so I am of those Able Ministers, She, in Her great Wisdom, has thought fit to employ; and 'tis for this Reason, that I would do my utmost to prevent the Undertaking of That, which, should it succeed, I very much apprehend, cannot but restect on the Queen's Honour, and prove dangerous to Her Ministers, and ruinous to Her People.

They are not much acquainted with the World who imagine, that those are most a Man's Friends, who are for pushing him on in an advent'rous Undertaking, 'tis often done with a quite different View than what the common People imagine. Thus in the Affair of Dr. Sacheverel, several very good Churchmen, who make now no inconsiderable Figure, appear'd very Zealous for that Prosecution, wisely foreseeing what would be the Event of it; and there are those who are no Friends to the present Measures, who, for the like Reasons, are forry that this Treaty of Commerce was not ratify'd, as it was desir'd.

To be plain then, Sir, I hope you and all your Friends will spare no Pains to prevent those Persons from being Chosen, who have already given their Votes for the 8th and 9th Articles, and that you will pitch upon such to succeed them, as you can depend upon, it never will.

In the next place, when you have chosen your Representatives, I hope you will give them ample Instructions, how to secure your Trade with Portugal, to explain and amend your Treaty of Commerce with France, and to examine into all the other Branches of your Trade. You may command them to purfue your Orders; they are your Servants; and formerly you, and none but you, paid them their Wages. Antiently, the Burroughs always give Instructions to their Members, especially in Matters of this Nature, of which you are the proper, nay the only Judges. Do not be banter'd out of your Senses; be affored, that neither the Church, nor the Prerogative, have any thing to do in this matter. Treatys that relate to Trade only, and to confirm which feveral Laws must be repeal'd, may be alter'd, without derogiting from her Majesty's Honour. You know, that even the Barrier and Succession Treaty, upon a Representation from the House of Commons, was alter'd, tho that was a Treaty of a mixt Nature, and of the highest Consequence imaginaildom,

eason,

ble. Your Trade is yours, your Wives and your Childrens Bread, your are to earn it, and you k now best how it is to be done. If your chuse Members only to give away your Money, and to ratify whatever is laid before them, even in Matters of Trade, this will be more like a Parliament of Paris, than the Representative of the Free People of Britain. Be afford, that if this Treaty of Commerce, as now offer'd in the 8th and 9th Arricles, is once confirm'd by a House of Commons, you will never get off from it, neither you, nor your Children's Children; for whatever may be the Event of any future War, as none can be more fuccessful than this has been, and as no body has had so great a Hand in the making of this Peace as our felves, this Treaty of Commerce will always be pinn'd down upon Britain.

If a Clergyman, who, without Reflection, may be inpposed not to be deep learn'd in Commerce; if a Courtier, who, you know, is already prepoffes'd, should endeavour to perswade you to act against your true Interest, Remember that you have gratify'd the Clergy, by exerting your selves so seasonably and vigorously for our Church; that you have obliged the C—t, by approving of the Peace; and now 'tis highly reasonable that you, in your turn, should be satisfy'd in point of Trade. You have wisely rely'd on the Judgment of the Clergy in the first, upon that of the Ministry in the second; for God's sake, trust to no Body's Judgment but your own in the latt.

I must also tell you, that as you have a Right to instruct your particular Members, so you have a Right to apply to the whole Body, when assembled; which if you do not, you can never answer it to your selves, or your Posteritys. In order to this, you must be sure to have humble and modest Petitions ready at every Place against the meeting of the Parliament; for the slinging out the Bill was in a great Measure owing to those seasonable Applications.

I need not tell you, that it is your undoubted Right to address your selves directly to Her Majesty; there are, I believe, sew, or none of you, but have of late been received very graciously by Her; and so most certainly you will be again, if you observe the Respect due to so Grear, and so Good a Queen; whose Ears are always open to Her People's Prayers, as well as to their Congratulations.

I shall conclude with a short Observation upon the fecond Paragraph of Her Majesty's Speech, where She is pleas'd to promife that She will apply the Supplys the Parliament has given, as far as they will reach, to fatisfy the Services they have voted. has very much startled abundance of People, because they think it implys, that there will be great Exceedings to be made good next Year; and then, fay they, To what Purpose has Two Shillings in the Pound upon Land been taken off, if all the Money that has been gi ven won't answer the Services for which the Publick Credit stands engag'd? What great Help is it to the Nation, if what is abated this Year, must be paid the next? Besides, it was hoped, that two Shillings upon Land, the whole English, with the additional Scotch Malt. and the Exchequer-Bills, and the Civil-List Mortgage, and the Civil-List it self (which in times of Peace, amounts to near a Million) might have been fufficient to have answer'd all the ordinary and extraordinary Expences of the Government, now we are eas'd of the Burthen of the War, by a fafe and honourable Peace: This, I must own, is altogether a considerable Sum.

I am forry Four Millions should not supply all the Occasions of this Year; but you see there will be a Necessity for a pretty deal of Money to be rais'd, even in time of Peace, which, I hope, will be a sufficient Caution to you to take care to chuse such Representatives as will be frugal of the Publick Treasure, as well as mindfull of your Trade. Pray shew this Letter to all our Friends, and remember me kindly to them,

I am, &c.
